From the Paris Gazette, dated Feb. 17.

Warſaw, January 20.

DEputies from the Palatinats and Diſtricts of Poland and Lithuania are come hither, to complain of the Diſorders committed by the Saxon Troops in their Quarters, where they extort at Will Proviſions, Carriages, and even Money. General Janus d' Eberſtet who commands them in chief, and whom King Auguſtus has made Preſident of thoſe Commiſſioners who ought to redreſs theſe Grievances, has cauſed circular Letters to be publiſhed, wherein he ſignifies, That King Auguſtus having been obliged by indiſpenſible Neceſſity to introduce into the Kingdom, for the Security of the Republick, Saxon Troops as Auxiliaries, had been informed that they take Contributions by Force; and all his Care being to ſtudy Means for putting an end to the Complaints brought againſt them from all Parts, he had written to their Officers to make them obſerve exact Diſcipline, and not to take any thing without paying for it in ready Money: That if any ſhould tranſgreſs, he ſhould be ſiezed and delivered to the neareſt Officers; and that if their Number was too great for the Country to ſieze them, Notice ſhould immediately be ſent to him, and he would forthwith cauſe exemplary Juſtice to be done upon them. The Nobility are however extremely diſcontented that they are burthened with maintaining the Saxon Troops, as alſo that King Auguſtus is gone into Saxony, notwithſtanding the Oppoſition of the Primate and the Senators, alledging that this is contrary to the Pacta conventa. The Senators who adhere firmeſt to him, have written to him to preſs him to return aſſoon as poſſibly he can.

The Memoires pour l'Hiſtoire des Sciences et des beaux Arts, for January 1714, printed at Trevoux, gives the following Account of a Book newly publiſhed in France ſetting forth The hiſtorical and political State of Commerce as managed by the Dutch.

THE Love of our native Country and the Good of the Publick gave Birth to this Work. The Author was engaged by certain Perſons whom he could not refuſe, to write upon Commerce, after having made ſeveral Voyages and procured ample Information on that Subject.

His Deſign being to give a juſt Idea of Trade principally as it relates to Politicks, he judged nothing could ſerve his Purpoſe better than to deſcribe the great Commerce carried on by the Dutch. Their Commerce being ſo extenſive, and managed with ſo much Application and Ability, and their Commonwealth by encouraging and making it flouriſh having raiſed it ſelf to ſo high a Degree of Power, no better Model can be propoſed to States who would procure the infinite Advantages of a well-ſettled Trade.

There are few things in Government that deſerve more Attention; to be convinced of this, let Men only reflect a little on the State of Europe, and obſerve the Difference between Countries that have Commerce and thoſe that have not. England and Holland, on whom in the preſent Age all depends, do (or ſhould) govern their Intereſts abroad with Reſpect ever to their Traffick. Husbandry and Commerce nouriſh and inrich a Nation: 'Tis thoſe two Arts that give it Life and Strength: A Truth that ought to be written in Letters of Gold in all the Cabinets of Princes and Miniſters, to admoniſh them to conſider the Husbandmen and Traders as they deſerve. By Commerce the Riches of the moſt diſtant Countries are brought to a State; 'tis a Mine that affords the more the more 'tis wrought, and is never exhauſted. The Lord Chancellor Bacon ſays, that Merchants and Traders are in a State, what the Blood is in the Body. It may be proved by Examples as antient as the World, that Nations have been powerful in proportion to their Application to Commerce, witneſs the Tyrians, the Athenians, the Carthaginians; But without recurring to ſuch diſtant Inſtances, it will be ſufficient to examine the ſurprizing Changes which Commerce has made in our Times among our Neighbours.

England, by the Protection and Encouragement which Queen Elizabeth during her Reign gave to Commerce, has from that time ſo enlarged her Trade and naval Strength, that ſhe has been able to maintain eaſily thoſe mighty Fleets which have rendred her the Terrour of the Ocean.

Nothing is comparable to what the Dutch have done by following this Maxim: But we have in France and under our own Eyes convincing Proofs of the Uſefulneſs of Commerce. Cardinal Richelieu, Monſieur Colbert, thoſe excellent Miniſters ſo zealous for aggrandizing the French Monarchy, thoſe Men of great Knowledge and clear Judgement, applied themſelves very much to enlarge our Commerce; they did not take Meaſures juſt enough, and their good Intentions had but moderate Succeſs: Yet the Augmentation of Traffick has enabled France to ſupport three Wars of ſeveral Years continuance againſt all Europe united. What would our Nation be then, if this never failing Spring of Wealth were as ably managed by us as by our Neighbours? My Lord Bellaſis uſed to ſay, that if the Turks did but know what they might be made capable of doing by Sea, and if the French ſhould come to apprehend rightly to what a Pitch they might carry their Commerce, the reſt of Europe would ſoon become their Conqueſt.

The foregoing Reflexions are taken from the Author's Preface. To proceed now to his Book: It is divided into fifteen Chapters, and gives a compleat and very particular View of the great Commerce of the Dutch. The firſt Chapter contains a brief Hiſtory of Commerce, from the Year 1000 to the Beginning of the preſent Centuty; it is too curious for us to neglect giving an Abſtract of it to our Readers.

[As that Abſtract would not come all into this Paper, we chuſe rather than divide it to give it intire at once in our next.]
